Profile

Leveraging almost 15 years of fundraising experience, Julie Mozena's expertise in grantwriting, research, strategic planning and training has helped a wide range of nonprofits, school districts, and government agencies around the nation and internationally raise millions in new funding for her clients. Julie holds a degree in English from UCLA, and is a talented program designer, writer, facilitator, trainer, and presenter. She is currently a member of the Marin Association of Female Executives (MAFE) and the Craig's List Advisory Board. Julie was honored to be named the MAFE Business Woman of the Year in 2005. She has conducted trainings for numerous organizations and events, including the Association of Fundraising Professionals, the Superior Courts of California, and the Junior League. She has also acted as a grant reviewer for drug court grants, the AmeriCorps program, and countless other government and nonprofit agencies. Julie has a wonderful and supportive husband, and is the proud mother of a son and daughter. In between running a business and raising young children, she enjoys walking her faithful dog Rex, reading really good books, and spending lots of quality time with her friends and family.

"At the Fundraising Day 2003 conference, I was so impressed with [your] workshop about Federal and State Grantwriting - specifically targeting the right RFPs, optimizing project partnerships, designing competitive programs and perfecting proposal budgets - that I had to find a way we could do business together. The grant proposal [you] subsequently wrote for us was magnificent. You taught me a lot about style, presentation, and professionalism in submitting a Federal grant proposal. This community needs your type of skills and understanding if we are to be successful at securing Federal and State grants for our county."
